About human trafficking in Canada:

Less than a kilometre from where you live today, someone is being trafficked.

Human trafficking is happening in cities and towns across our country. Every day, at-risk youth and adults are manipulated and forced to participate in the sex trade or labour market. What starts as a seemingly innocent conversation online or in real life can quickly turn into something sinister that affects lives forever.

It can happen anywhere at any time. Individuals are lured into the sex trade or forced labour every day in Canada because they are unaware of the malicious tactics used by predators.

One of the key focuses of the Joy Smith Foundation is the prevention of human trafficking through improved education and awareness.

The most important first step you can take toward helping combat this issue is to know the facts.

Human trafficking can be described as modern-day slavery involving the recruitment, transportation, or harbouring of persons for the purpose of exploitation, typically in the sex trade or through forced labour.

Human trafficking exists in two main forms in Canada: Sex Trafficking and Forced Labour.

Unfortunately, it is a lucrative criminal enterprise and traffickers are actively recruiting every day in Canadian urban and rural areas, and across provincial borders.

It's a growing Canadian problem that goes largely unnoticed because victims are first lured by false trust and then stripped of their ability to make decisions so that they are ultimately controlled by threats, coercion and manipulation.

Knowledge is our greatest protection against this crime.

The more we know and understand about human trafficking, the more we can do to prevent it from occurring.
